

Crash Course

Some things just don't go well together. You know...fuel and fire, water and electricity...a 16 year old kid and a fast car.

The brief description attached to these pics said rescue arrived and found the dazed kid driver standing up in the yard. When they called his house, his parents thought he was in his bed sleeping. He'd taken out a telephone pole on this nice suburban street, and the front half of the car ended up landing 60 feet from the rear.

Hey all you speed demons out there...listen up! Operating a vehicle at high speeds is dangerous, and the danger is even greater when you're in a residential area. This kid in this car is lucky he only took out a telephone pole and split his car in half. He could easily have driven right into someone's house, a slow moving car, or struck a pedestrian.
